Protanomaly

Design | Sample | Develop

Protanomaly colorblindness simluation has been applied to the color palette.

"In males with protanomaly, the red cone photopigment is abnormal. Red, orange, and yellow appear greener and colors are not as bright. This condition is mild and doesn't usually interfere with daily living. Protanomaly is an X-linked disorder estimated to affect 1 percent of males." National Eye Institute

Rod Monochromacy

Design | Sample | Develop

Neutral 3 and Vibrant 2 have inadequate contrast to be discerned by users with rod monochromacy color blindenss.

Rod Monochromacy colorblindness simluation has been applied to the color palette.

"This type of monochromacy is rare and is the most severe form of color blindness. It is present at birth. None of the cone cells have functional photopigments. Lacking all cone vision, people with rod monochromacy see the world in black, white, and gray." National Eye Institute

Typical Vision

Design | Sample | Develop

The Primary color is too light to provide adequate contrast for white text to be used on top of it, such as a button or tile. The current contrast ratio is 1.44:1 and the WCAG 2.0 AA guidelines recommend a contrast ratio of at least 4.5:1 so the text can be discerned by users with moderately low visual acuity.
